

Shared Dreams and Green Ink:

Poet-Translator William O'Daly Celebrates Thirty Years with Pablo Neruda

William O'Daly celebrates the culmination of his eight-book Late-Career and Posthumous Pablo Neruda Series. O'Daly will read his poems and his translations of Neruda, accompanied by Rick Wilson, a marvelous player of flutes—historical to present day—from all over the world. O'Daly's reading will provide perspective on his distinguished series and Neruda, and a brief Q/A session and a book signing will follow.

Join us on May 6th with PABLO NERUDA

In the voice of poet-translator William O'Daly

"O'Daly has spent more than 20 years translating Neruda's late work, and here he brings his awe-inspiring nine-volume* Copper Canyon project to a conclusion with taut, spare renderings that capture what, in the end, is the hopeful pith of Neruda's troubled old-age rumination: "The world was finishing us / and we went on losing / winning more each day." Neruda turned the whole dramatic odyssey of his life into a poem in progress, and O'Daly's work reminds us how astonished and grateful we should continue to be." —Los Angeles Times, Sunday Book Review
